Summary,

We held an interaction session with Entrepreneur 'Yamini Rapeti' who has a substantial economical business model in the ecological space of waste management.

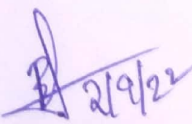

The interaction started off with how one can get investments from venture capitalists and followed with the journey of her startup. Later, it turned out to be common challenges faced by new age entrepreneurs relevant to any business field.

Then, the speaker explored how startup culture is inculcated among student communities. The first thing for that to happen is to create an environment around oneself such as picking your friends and interaction with existing entrepreneurs and alumni.

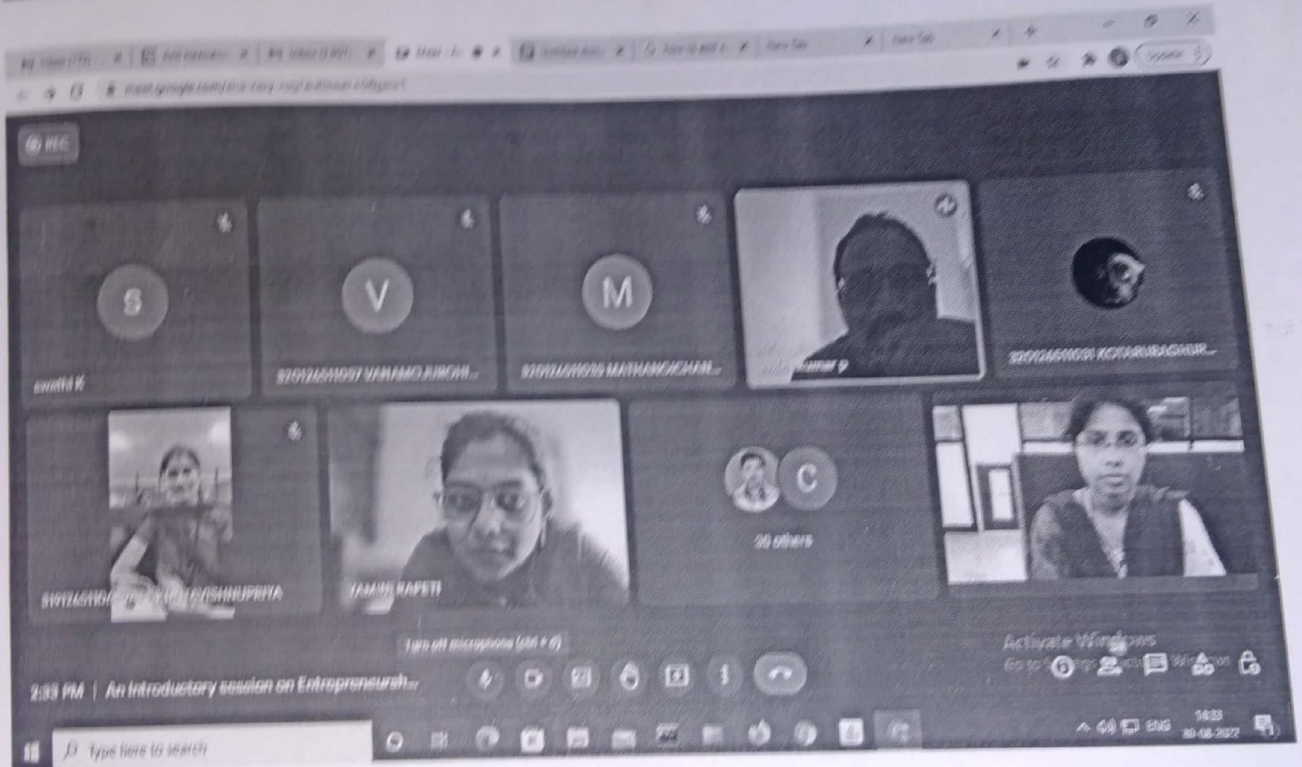

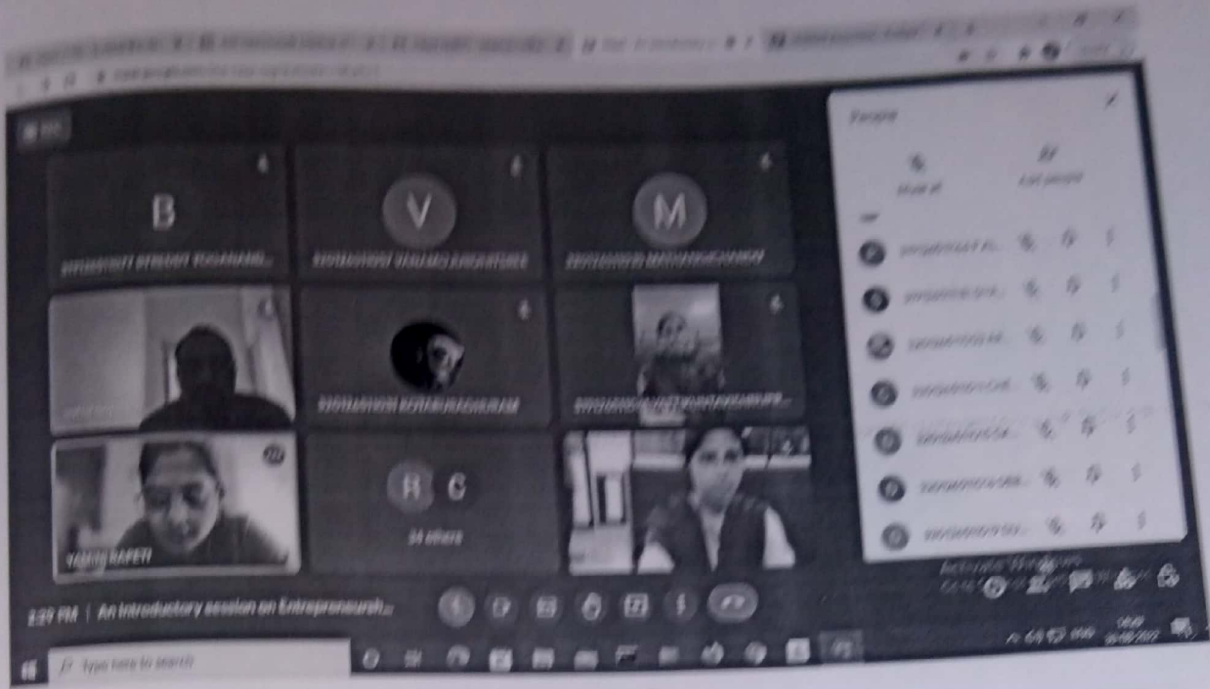

The next session dealt with how to approach investors on board and to display excellence and a pilot model of your business in order to set up a proper relation of trust among the founders and investors. The speaker insisted on maintaining a lubricant relation with the investors and flexibility with the execution but not the idea.

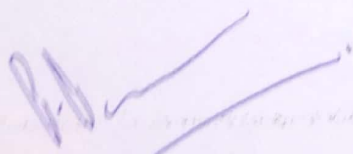

Things proceeded with more execution and initial processes of setting up startups and how things work in a real time environment, like how government policies aid the startup and their limitations as one approach apart from venture capitalists.

The speaker insisted on shaping your ideas in such a way that is clear with its objectives.
